

PULCINELLA RESTAURANT MAY 2013-05-31

Pulcinella is in Moraira, at the bottom right hand end of the Ramblas style street nearest to the sea. Thirty two people from the dining out group were shoehorned in on two long tables, which actually worked well to get people mixing, which is part of the idea behind the dining out group. The starters were all good, eg. baked aubergines, beef carpaccio with tuna sauce, main course a little more mixed, some people delighted, some complaining of cold veg, small portions on large plates, and the staff clearly struggled with the size of the group. A discord over a half bottle of wine was unnecessary and bad PR.

Since writing this review the restaurant cancelled the second U3A group at short notice. The reason was the first group made too much noise! 32 people in a low ceilinged restaurant – what do they expect? They were greedily trying to squeeze in other tables instead of capitalising on a group which may provide year round repeat business. I suggest other U3A members may also wish to show what they think of such shabby behaviour and vote with their feet!
